Part of a series on.This page was last edited on 14 DecemberatThe computation of line integral (L) around the inferior portion of the posterior border of the pars flaccida of the cilia and around the middle portion of the inferior border of the pars tensa is used to calculate the mean aqueous PO(2). The L/A ratio represents the PO(2) of the aqueous humor in mm of Hg. The variability of the ratio (relative scatter) is used to quantify the precision of this method for assessing PO(2). Previous clinical studies have shown that the PO(2) in human aqueous humor of eyes with open angles correlates highly with the PO(2) of blood. We are now studying 12 subjects, 6 with open angles and 6 with closed angles, to determine if the same relationship exists between the PO(2) of the aqueous humor of the eye and the PO(2) of the blood of the same eye.Investigation of a nongastric primary manifestation of Helicobacter pylori-induced chronic atrophic gastritis in Taiwan. The pathogenesis of Helicobacter pylori-induced chronic atrophic gastritis (CAG) remains unclear. The purpose of this study was to investigate a nongastric primary manifestation of CAG in Taiwan. A total of 114 consecutive patients with endoscopically and histologically proven CAG were enrolled from the Catholic University Hospital, Taipei, Taiwan, from January 1, 1998 to December 31, 1999, and followed up for an average of 34.3 +/- 24.9 months. The clinical features and endoscopic findings of the patients were compared with those of a control population. Biopsy specimens were taken from the duodenum and/or rectum of the patients to detect H. pylori and/or Campylobacter jejuni, and tested for H. pylori antigen. A significant difference was noted in the proportions of H. pylori infection and C. jejuni colonization between patients and control patients. One patient complained of non-specific symptoms that were of no gastric origin. The evaluation of duodenal histological examinations indicated 11 (10%) patients had antral/duodenal mucosal atrophy and 26 (24%) patients had gastric atro
