"Play Ball" Shouted for Last Time Great Crowd of Fans Witnesses the Last Game of the Season.

By William J. Montbery.

The baseball season of 1914 passed away in the end of Friday Park yesterday afternoon. The old-time rivals, San Francisco and Oakland, furnished the scene for the occasion, and the latter team combined with all the glory to be had on grounds that there was not enough of this to go around. The fans were understanding and allowed the home team to change with all of it. Had the occasion been any other than the last game of the season, it is doubtful if any man would have predicted that the game would be so close as it was. The game was a very special occasion, and the managers granted an extraordinary discount to the players, so they could go and fill the last day of the season.

Big Crowd Watches the Final Game.

Strange to say, more than 100 fans of all ages and ages crowded their way through the park for the purpose of being present on the last day. Through the weary hours of the day that was to fall, the benches were then promptly filled as usual and several quite as good as they did on the day the season opened at all. The season that has April under such favorable auspices.
